Mulberry is pleased to announce the appointment of celebrated British designer Christopher Kane as Creative Director of Women's Ready-to-Wear. The partnership marks the next step in the 'Back to the Mulberry Spirit' strategy, which has seen the brand reconnect with its uniquely British blend of creativity, craft, and culture. Kane is a graduate of Central Saint Martins – as well as the winner of the Vogue Fashion Fund and four British Fashion Awards, including Womenswear Designer of the Year.

“Welcoming Christopher marks an important moment for Mulberry as we open a new chapter for ready-to-wear,” said Andrea Baldo, CEO of Mulberry. “Christopher brings a rare combination of creativity, intellectual rigour and instinctive playfulness, alongside a deep respect for craft and materials. His vision resonates strongly with Mulberry’s heritage and the spirit of British creativity that defines the house. Together we look forward to evolving Mulberry’s creative language beyond accessories and shaping a compelling future for ready-to-wear on a global stage.”

On the partnership, Christopher Kane said: "It is an honour to join Mulberry, a brand with such a rich British heritage and a deep commitment to craft. I look forward to working closely with Andrea and the team to create a new chapter of ready-to-wear that celebrates the spirit of Mulberry."

The first Mulberry by Christopher Kane collection will debut in September 2026, and in stores and online from January 2027.
